Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Hillside is located on an elevated site on the northern side of the Hutchins Landing Road about seven miles east of its intersection with U.S. Highway 61 South. The Greek Revival house with Italianate detailing rests upon brick foundation piers and is surmounted by a hipped roof pierced by four, interior brick chimneys that are well detailed with arched panels and corbeled caps. A deep gallery is recessed beneath the hipped roof on the three public elevations of the house and features a bracketed and dentiled cornice. The gallery is supported by molded box columns linked by a railing of rectangular-sectioned balusters with molded handrail. The box columns are echoed in pilasters at the corners of the house. Although the common practice in the Natchez region is to finish wall surfaces in horizontal tongue-and-groove boards where protected by a gallery, Hillside eschews this local architectural tradition by having all its exterior wall surfaces finished in lap siding. A frontispiece entrance with bracketed and dentiled cornice occupies the center bay of the five-bay southerly facade and is filled by a molded four-panel door flanked by sidelights over molded panels and set beneath a transom framed by scrolls. Windows on the facade are floor-length and filled with six-over-nine, double-hung sash, but windows on the side elevations vary with some floor-length and others filled with regular six-over-six, double-hung sash. All windows are closed by original shutter blinds.

The interior floor plan, which is unique for the Natchez area, has three rooms of varying sizes on each side of a central hallway, which is divided into front and rear sections by a wall with a doorway filled with four-leaf, folding, molded two-panel doors set within a surround that is molded, shouldered, and battered and that is repeated throughout the house around windows and doorways. Interior single-leaf doors have four molded panels, baseboards are molded with two fascia, and wooden mantel pieces are pilastered with the frieze slightly arched along the bottom edge. Another unusual feature of the house is the original closet of the northwestern rear room, which is closed by an arrangement of double-leaf doors and a single-leaf door set within the same shouldered surround. A shorter overhead closet is closed by a single-leaf door. Alterations to the house are minimal and include the installation of closets and a bathroom between the two rear rooms on the eastern side of the house. The original doorway opening from the rear section of the hallway into the back yard was replaced with windows by an earlier owner. A sensitive restoration by the present owners will soon be completed.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Hillside is one of Mississippi's unique residential essays in the vernacular Greek Revival style with some features similar to other Mississippi plantation dwellings but with certain architectural characteristics that distinguish it from its counterparts. Hillside is one of nine extant pre-Civil War houses in the historic Kingston community, or Jersey Settlement, southeast of Natchez and was probably built in the late 1850's as the residence of Mrs. Jeremiah Cory. Mrs. Cory later shared her home with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Foules, who were the reason the house was often referred to as the Foules House by Adams County residents in the nineteenth century. Like Stanton Hall and Magnolia Hall, grand Natchez mansions constructed on the eve of the Civil War, Hillside evidences the influence of the newly popular Italianate style in the bracketed cornices of the gallery and entrance frontispiece, the scrolls that flank the doorway transom, the wooden pilastered mantel pieces with friezes having arched lower edges, and the beautifully detailed chimneys with arched panels and corbeled caps. Hillside is the only Adams County plantation residence embraced by galleries on its three public elevations and its floor plan is unique for the Natchez region. A range of three rooms, the same width but varying depths, flank a central hallway that is divided by a wall with a wide opening filled with folding doors. Unlike other Natchez area plantation houses, the hall does not widen at the rear, "cabinet" rooms were never a feature of the floor plan, and the exterior walls protected by the gallery are not finished in horizontal tongue-and-groove boards or plaster. Hillside possesses a high degree of architectural integrity, and the house enjoys a pastoral, unspoiled plantation setting.
