Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Situated on an eleven-acre tract of land south of Washington, Mississippi, and entered on the east side of the Washington-Palestine Road about a mile and a half from its intersection with State Highway 84/98, the Warren-Erwin House is a story-and-a-half, frame, mid-nineteenth century plantation residence set upon brick foundation piers. The gable roof is flanked by two, outside-end brick chimneys, which break away at the second-story floor level to rise unattached from the gable ends of the house. The southwesterly facade is fronted by a gallery supported by tapered box columns with molded capitals that are linked by an unusual jigsaw railing. The five-bay facade, which is finished in matched boards with a molded base, consists of a center-bay entrance doorway flanked by well-detailed windows with molded surrounds and aprons with two fascias. All window openings are filled with six-over-six, double-hung sash and were never closed by shutter blinds. The entrance doorway consists of double-leaf, molded, two-panel doors that are set within sidelights and transom that feature a possibly unique arrangement of oval lights with intermediate applied decorative trim. The sidelights are set over molded panels and the pilasters of the doorway support an architrave with simple cornice supported by paired brackets. The interior floor plan of the house is a common variation of the early, regional, single-pile plan with central passage and rear "cabinet" rooms with what would have been a recessed rear gallery in the early plan being enclosed as part of the original construction in the later variation. The walls and ceilings throughout the interior are finished in matched boards, and the mantel pieces are wooden and pilastered. The two major front rooms and central hall are more richly trimmed with architrave door and window surrounds, four-paneled and molded doors, and molded bases. The rear "cabinet" rooms, the room between the "cabinets," and the second-story bedrooms feature unmolded, two-panel doors, unmolded door and window surrounds, and unmolded bases. The interior enclosed stairway is entered on the southerly wall of the room between the "cabinet" rooms, where it first makes a quarter turn with winders and then continues in a straight flight in a southwesterly direction to terminate in a second-story hallway. Before the house was moved to its present site, it had never been plumbed or wired and retained all of its original paint colors and wood-graining, most of which has been preserved. The original detached kitchen had already disappeared before the house was moved, and the present owners have added a one-story rear wing with gable roof to house a modern kitchen, den, and bathrooms.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Warren-Erwin House is one of Mississippi's unique residential essays in the vernacular Greek Revival Style. The house is a good example of the typical, mid-nineteenth century, Mississippi plantation house that is characterized as a story-and-a-half, frame residence set upon brick foundation piers with gable roof, undercut gallery, and five-bay facade. However, the house achieves distinction from its vernacular architectural details which include the use of double-leaf entrance doors more commonly associated with Federal Style architecture, the possibly unique oval lights and applied decoration of the sidelights and transom of the entrance doorway, and the unusual jigsaw railing of the front gallery. The house gains added significance from the survival of its original interior paint scheme, most of which has been retained, and from its continuous ownership by the same family for which it was constructed. The house was probably constructed shortly before the Civil War for Jefferson County planter Daniel Warren and wife Elizabeth. After Elizabeth's death in the early 1870's, Daniel Warren moved to Texas, and the house became the residence of his daughter Nancy and her husband T. J. Erwin. Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Erwin, Jr., were the last family members to reside in the house before it was acquired in 1979 by their great-grandson Larry Holder and wife Annette. Empty for many years and in deteriorating condition, the Holders moved the house approximately thirty-five miles to neighboring Adams County and placed the house on an eleven-acre portion of a plantation site similar to the original site. Before the house was moved and subsequently restored, it had never been plumbed or wired for electricity. Its original interior decorative scheme had survived intact and included grained doors, black mantel pieces, and the use of as many as four different paint colors for walls, bases, architrave surrounds, and window sashes. The second-story bedrooms had never been painted and the wood walls had mellowed to a deep brown color.

Verbal boundary description and justification See attached xerox copy of survey of Sheriff's Retreat Plantation with 11-acre nominated tract outlined in red. This eleven-acre tract constitutes the total acreage acquired by the owner of the Warren-Erwin House and provides a plantation-like setting for the house in its new location.
